DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The house is built in two parts. The earliest section is a small, two-story, frame building of three bays. The roof is a steep A-roof, covered with split shingles, and there is a tall, stove flue extending above the west end. The siding is of rough lumber and the windows and central door are small openings (no sash left.)

Attached to this on the west is a large, three-bay house that also faces south. This, however, has the doorway in the gable end on this facade. A returned cornice and a half-round window, high in the gable, give this part a pedimented, Greek-Revival look. Sheathing is of German siding.

Nearby are a frame corn crib, with an interior stairway leading to the loft, and a deteriorating bank barn.
